Test - 15 Read the passage and answer the questions.

James the Jumble

Once upon a time there was an untidy bedroom, a very untidy bedroom. It belonged to a boy called James. James made such a mess, whatever he did, that his mum called him James the Jumble.

'James, James the Jumble,' she would call, 'come and look at this room. It's awful!'

There were toffee- wrappers on the floor, crumpled clothes in every corner, crisps in the bed and toys spread. The untidy room made both his parents cross.

'Tidy up NOW, James the Jumble, or you'll have NO TEA!'

So James would open the wardrobe and drawers and stuff the mess in there instead. The room then looked better, but if you opened a cupboard door everything tumbled out on to the floor again.

Now, the untidy bedroom had had enough. Its sides ached with the weight of all the toys showed on its shelves; its walls itched where James had scribbled on them ; its cupboard doors creaked painfully, fit to burst with all the junk trying to force its way out; its floor was choked with dust because there was no space to vacuum.

One afternoon James the Jumble decided he wanted an adventure playground upstairs. He hung up fraying string ladders and slung ropes across between the door handles. When his mum popped out to the shop for bread, James dragged in a dirty plank from the garden and balanced it between the bed and the chest of drawers.

At last, the playground could stand no more. It decided to run away. James was just practising his Tarzan jungle call when he felt the playground move.

All the toys, books, and clutter poured off the shelves and landed on James the Jumble. Everything was bouncing all around him and the dirty plank had tumbled across the fallen wardrobe so James was trapped behind.
